Prof. John F. Cockrem is a Professor in Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand. Prof. Cockrem is especially interested in the variation between birds in their corticosterone responses. His research investigates relationships between corticosterone responses, personality and fitness (breeding success and the production of offspring) in birds. Prof. Cockrem also developed novel methods for the establishment of new breeding populations of kororā and hence to reverse the current decline of the species. He has published his research work (130 publications) in esteemed journals.
